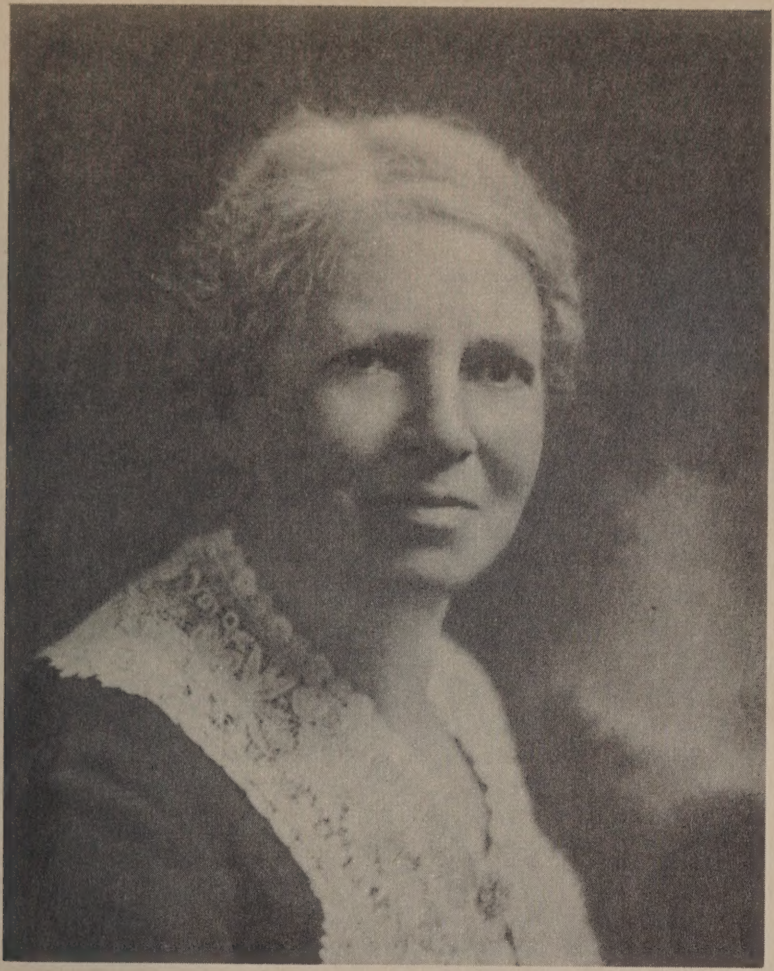
COMMENCEMENT

1942

To the memory of Grace Allen Hollis we respectfully dedicate this Commencement Issue of our Highlights.



A Tribute To Mrs. Hollis

By Inez Morang

A very gracious lady was she
As God had meant her to be.
Her hair slowly turned to gray
As she sought to help us on our way.
So understanding, gentle, and kind--
A greater lady will be hard to find.
Her knowledge of truth was great.
But, alas, we have realized it much too late
Her face was pleasant to behold
As each of us entered her tiny fold.
All too swiftly the years have flown
If only we could have known
That God had already set a date
For her to enter the golden gate.
That God had sent the angel down
To place on her head a golden crown.
That her days on earth were complete;
And she was about to kneel at His feet.
Yes, a very gracious lady was she
Just as God had meant her to be.

A Tribute to Charlton High

To day we Seniors will say good--bye
    To our beloved Charlton High.
How swiftly the years have past
    Our happy, carefree daysdidn't last Half as long as we hoped they would
    And some didn't do the best they could
But with heavy heart we'll say good-bye
    To our beloved Charlton High.

To our loving teachers we shall say good-bye
    For they are a part of Charlton High
How kind and patient they all have been.
    Our troubles were their troubles when
We just couldn't seen to understand
    How willing they were to give us a hand.
So with fond remembrance we say good-bye
    To our beloved Charlton High.

When we reach our goal at last we shall not forget our gracious past.
When each of us have found our place
    We shall not forget thy loving face.
You have helped to make us what we are
    Though we are scattered near and far.
And even though we will have said Good-bye--
    We shall never forgot our Charlton High.

CLASS HISTORY

The class of '42 arrived at Charlton High School in 1937 with Miss Manzi as our guide and Barbara Grimwade as our leader. With forty-seven members, we started on the road to higher endeavor. In the annual play contest, we presented "The Tantrum", which was a great success.

We passed the first milestone and entered the eighth grade with forty-six members. We had a very successful year with Mrs. Madaus as our Pilot and Robertine Tucker as our Co Pilot. The presentation of "Little Brother Sherlock," sorry to say, didn't win.

Mr. Madaus lead us during the Freshman year, with aid from the following officers, President, Robertine Tucker; Vice President, Grace Converse; Secretary, Barbara Grimwade; Treasurer, Stanley Cook. At last, our long cherished dreams of winning the play contest were fulfilled by introducing "Cousin Anhe". We participated in class basketball; and although we did not carry away the prize, we were very proud of winning the Sportsman's award given by the Athletic Club. Grace Converse was chosen as a speaker on the Debating team, and we were well represented in the annual Dramatic Club play.

With great joy we passed the third milestone, and we entered the Sophomore class with thirty-five members. Mrs. Fiske was our guide and our leaders were; Barbara Grimwade, Kenneth Kuehl, Robertine Tucker, Grace Converse. This year we chose "The Laundry Mark" as the play most likely to win the Senior play contest. We were a little disappointed, however, when the cup passed us by for another play. Grace Converse was chosen a debater again this year and did very well. As varsity Basketball player Barbara Grimwade was chosen and she did a fine job representing the class. Two members won prizes in Prize speaking this year, a fact that greatly pleased the other members.

In Sept. 1940, twenty-nine students could be seen and heard entering the Junior class room. With Mrs. Hammond as our Captain and Kenneth Kuehl, as our skipper, we had a very enjoyable year. We also gained a new member this year, Evelyn Hilton. The Junior Prom of this year was a roaring success. Bob Pooley's orchestra furnished the music, and the hall was decorated with the class colors of cerise and gold and with the crystal ball as an added attraction. We chose yellow roses as our class flowers. Every activity of the high school found some juniors participating and endeavoring to enjoy our high school life.

We rounded the corner and saw extended before us the last shining portion of our high school highway. We now had twenty-eight members as Ernest Bates had left us to join the Navy. We also gained two members this year Eileen Fitzgerald, and Ruby Kurowia. The seniors presented the Annual Class Play entitled "Once There Was a Princess". We feel that this was one of our most successful undertakings. The cast included the following: Verna Gard, Stanley Cook, Robertine Tucker, Grace Converse, Kenneth Kuehl, Paul Burns, John Pierangeli, Inez Morang, Barbara Grimwade, Mary Clark, Eileen Fitzgerald, Pauline Loconto, Kathryn Daley, Jessie Butler, Barbara Leland Lowell Bond, and Bruce Lamprey.

We are very proud of the following pupils who are to represent us at our graduation: Grace Converse, Robertine Tucker, Barbara Grimwade, Verna Gard, John Pierangeli.

It is hard to realize that our high school days are now ending. We have tried to do our best in all our undertakings, and we honestly pray that we may carry on the traditions and ideals which our parents and faculty have tried to instill in us.

CLASS PROPHECY

Many years have lapsed since I was graduated from Charlton High, but today as I go through the trunks in my attic, trying to decide in which trunk to pack my winter clothes, I accidentally found my "Commencement" issue of our school magazine. Although I have hap-hazardly examined my trunks, I was unable to do the same with this book. It is just a book with the pages turning yellow from age, yet--it seemed to hold my attention as nothing else had for some time. Fondly I examined its contents and by the time, I had reached the back cover, my thoughts were miles away. I was no longer thinking of my winter clothes, no longer thinking of the hot summer ahead, no--I was no longer thinking of the pieces of clothing at my feet, for in their place was something more beautiful.

I could see so vividly--every member of my class and so leaving everything else behind, I decided to visit each and every one of them.

Somewhere in a distance I see a microphone, no not just one, but many and around them I faintly see millions of people. Then out of no where comes the tiny figure of a woman. It was easy to see that the people loved this little figure very much, and as my vision became clearer I could see that this extremely lovely woman was Grace Converse. I watched her for a moment--then she began to speak. The sound of her voice went into every microphone, which would carry her voice to the farthest corners of the earth. The smallest member of our class had become the greatest radio actress of the century. She had long ago been offered a contract with any producer in the country at her own price, but that was not what Gracie had wanted so she refused and carried on her radio career.

Suddenly my train of thought is broken by the sound of a bugle and I now see Roy Harrison. Immediately after graduation Roy joined the United States Navy Air Corps and had climbed steadily upward. He is now a high ranking officer, and because he flies extremely well, he was chosen to instruct a new group of fliers. Roy has just landed and his plane has no more than reached the ground when it is surrounded by young ladies. And as I take another look I am surprised to see just how lovely these young ladies are. However, it is time to take off and even though the young ladies have been instructed to leave the field--some linger for just one more glimpse--only too late for the plane has swung around and there was a serious accident.

What a coincidence! For running across the field is a very pretty young nurse. Nurse Robertine Tucker had been changing planes and had seen the accident. Ever so gently yet ever so quickly she does her duty. To look at her pretty face and hands--one would never guess that Robertine was a great nurse. She is now head nurse in a large well known hospital in Chicago. Through her help and guidance the hospital has prospered. All her patients love her dearly for she is always sweet and gentle; always willing to give a helping hand and to cheer some lonely heart. To her friends she is known as "Tina". May you climb ever onward and upward "Tina", and we know you will for you have the courage to carry on where others would fail.

From somewhere I hear the steady click, click of a typewriter and looking around I see Miss Verna Gard, another pretty member of our class. She is very slim and sophisticated,for she is now private secretary to the President in Washington. How easily her slim fingers have mastered the keys and in no time at all her work is all completed with out an error. Verna is a very charming girl and always has a smile--especially for the President.

As we leave Verna, we see an air plane hovering above and its wings bend earth ward at an enormous rate of speed.We hold our breath until it lands;as a heavy body emerges from the plane,we recognize him as Bruce Lamprey. One of the pilots of America, Bruce is an excellant pilot and practices many hours in the air in order to better himself in some small way. He has built many model air planes-some of which have been accepted by the President of the United States. However in his spare time Bruce entertains himself by instructing some young ladies to fly. In the past years Bruce has made many flights to Europe. Yes, we are sure that Bruce will continue to fly higher and higher until he has reached the highest goal.

Once again my mind wanders as I hear some beautiful strains of music. The music comes from a large ballroom where Albert Bucharell is tuning up his orchestra. He is known as "The Trumpet King" and well he might be for when he raises his trumpet to his lips the air is filled with beautiful music. To look at the people one would think that they were held in a spell as they stop their shopping and listen hungrily for those trumpet notes. He has written many beautiful arrangements of his own. He is known the world over and when one mentions the "Trumpet King", everyone stops to listen for the sound of his trumpet.

As the strains of music fade--we hear the laughter of many children and as we turn aside--we see another young lady with an extremelY charming personality. This lady is also a member of our class. She is Miss Barbara Leland, who is a child gaurdian. Each day of the week she covers many miles.One seesthatevery one of the children seems to love her and eagerly scamper to meet her as they see her drive up. She has mastered this re~~ø~~sponsibility with ease and some how, I seem to envy her, for she has so many to love her and I have so few.

From behind I hear the rapid step of some young lady so I turn quickly. Lo and behold! before me stands the most beautiful blue eyed young lady I have ever seen. And who may she be? Why Kathryn Daley of course. Kay has pitch black hair which is very becoming as is her slim figure. She seems to be everywhere at once, and never realizes that she has many admirers. Kay has a very special admier and on Sundays if one should pass a certain farm, they would see a very attractive farmerette, just as lovely in her overalls as in her business suit.

Suddenly I smell a very pleasing aroma, and tracing its source, I find myself outside the Army Camp. However, I'm still not satisfied so I enter. After being shown about the grounds, I am taken to the kitchen and am introduced to their expert dictician. To my surprise

I see before me Mary Clark. Her meals are fit for a king after her many hours of study to get just the right one. Mary has spent a great deal of time on the study of preparation of food and her reward will be a great many strong young men in our future.

As I leave the camp I see a sign which reads "The United Airplane Plant" and, because I was going that way I decided to visit the plant. I am shown around by a special guide who explains as he goes along. After quite some time I was lead into a section of the plant which contained the most expert help to be obtained. I was told that the salary was $100.00 per week. One Hundred dollars a week--WHEW!! But my thoughts were interrupted when I saw a very handsome young gentleman looking at me. Why it's John Pierangeli. However, I was not surprised as I knew years ago that John would easily reach the top. His intelligent thinking and skillful use of his hands has made him an important man in America's future.

As I reached my car, I snapped on the radio--by force of habit--not because I was particularly interested. There was a baseball game on and as I listened aimlessly, I caught a part of a familiar name. I turned the radio on louder hoping to hear it again. Then I heard "Stanley Cook had just hit a home run"--the crowd seems to go wild, for he is a great favorite among the baseball fans. Shortly after Stan left school he was fortunate enough to be able to join the baseball league. But the league has never been sorry, for Stanley is now the star player and wherever he is the people flock to see him when he knocks the ball out of the stadium.

As I am about to enter the gate of an enormous mansion, I notice a governess with three children. As I drove nearer to them I recognized the governess to be Evelyn Hilton. Evelyn has a very sweet face and is always smiling so we do not wonder why the children trip lightly behind her. She seems like a mother to them and she certainly deserves the title. For to the three children, Evelyn has been mother, nurse, and teacher. With her sweet face and sunny disposition she is bound to find success.

Leaving the lovely mansion, we continue our journey but are delayed for a moment on Fifth Avenue. It is here we meet Marie Buteau. Marie is an office worker and keeps many books and files in order for her employer. We enter the office, and through a window I watch Marie as she so deftly files the material in the correct position. I am told she is an expert and I truly believe she is.

The sound of a motor reaches my ears. There goes Kenneth Keuhl in his boat race. Swiftly his boat skims over the water and shortly his out board motor stops. Once again he has won the race. Kenny holds the championship title and by the looks--it is his for keeps. He travels all over the country and always manages to win the race. May he continue to win the race for he has a great future in store.

Say what goes on here? Here comes Lowell Bond with his enormous trailer truck. To see the way he handles the truck, one would think it was but a toy. How swiftly, easily and carefully he guides his truck to its destination. During his years of truck driving he has never had an accident. We sincerely hope he always continues his journeys in safety.

As we drive through the street of a quiet littletown, we see a sign which says "Lily, the Fashion Designer". As we enter the shop Liris Peters greets us. Lily does all her own work. She is extremely busy now, and she is designing dresses for the forth coming debutantes. To look around her shop one can tell that she is making an extremely large profit and well she deserves this, for her designs are extremely beautiful.

Oh dear! there's something wrong with my car. How fortunate for across the street is a large garage. Oh! here's Milton Kaufman. Milton is a very excellent salesman and deals with Pontiacs. How strange my Pontiac just broke down. However, this is only one of his small garages that are scattered about the country and Mac is just checking up. He stays in Florida himself where he owns the largest garage of all. Good luck Mac and may your Pontiacs continue to roll over the country side.

Jessie Butler is another successful stenographer of our class, and her knowledge of shorthand is extensive. She has charge over many other stenographers but with her charm and personality it is not surprising. Jessie was one of the most attractive girls in our class and through the years has become even more attractive. There is no doubt that Jessie will gain a very prominent place in the world of business.

Once again I see a white uniform before me. It is Margaret Terrill. Maggie is very prominent in her chosen profession, and when she is not on duty she reads books, that will further her education. She is very quiet and when missing is always found alone in some corner reading a book. Maggie loves her work, and we are sure she will reach her goal.

Just down the street I encounter Elwood Nixon. Elwood works for the telephone company and does just about everything imaginable with electricity. If your telephone is out of order--call Nixon and in no time at all his skillful fingers will right the wrong so you may talk to your sweetie.

As I find myself in front of a beauty salon, I decide to get a manicure. No sooner do I step inside when Pauline Loconto is beside me. Polly is an expert hiar dresser and for 50¢ she will give you a lovely shampoo--for 75¢ a blue rinse; and then for another 75¢ she will set your hair. Lo and behold before you know it, she has made a beauty of you. (that is-if it is humanly possible.) If it weren't for Polly--some of these beautiful gals just wouldn't be beautiful.

Leaving Polly and her beauty salon I continue my journey. I accidently bump into an exquisite young lady. Facing her--I notice her lovely blue eyes and beautiful black hair. Yes, its Eileen Fitzgerald. She tells me she is a very successful private secretary. And she has an office of her own. She is very charming girl and always has a smile. Eileen has become a great success in the business world.

Here comes a young man who seems to be in a great hurry. Why its Everett Harris. At last he sees me and stops for a chat. In his hands are many blue prints and figures. He is an electrical engineer and has little time of his own, as he studies a great deal and makes many blue prints. E verett was one of our blushing boys and at the slightest hint would turn colors. How ever with his knowledge he can afford to turn colors.

Looking away I see another airport. How busy it is. As I enter the hangar a man with greasy hands and face speaks. It is Alexander Peters, who is a machanic. He tells me that he has travelled many miles by plane to accompany the pilot should something happen to the plane motor. During the past years, he has repaired many hundreds of motors. Continue your good work and so continue to keep them flying.

From a distance I see a tall stately woman with a very pretty face and I recognize her as Barbara Grimwade. Just to look at her one would know she is a successful business women. Barbare is a medical assistant to one of the world's most prominent doctors. Every dayshe seems to learn something for she has never ending thirst for knowledge. With her devastating charm and personality she will continue to soar ever onward and upward.

The day is warm and I see a beautiful farm off in the country. In the pasture are many head of cattle grazing. There are acres and acres of gardens and in the midst of them is Paul Burns. He is a very successful farmer and each year reaps a large profit in both crop and money. May he continue to till the soil, for he shall be rewarded for his labor.

Leaving Burn's farm I pass a car with a sign on the side which reads "Edwin Nelson--Electrician". We both stop at once and he bubbled over with enthusisam about his successful career. He has just wired a beautiful mansion job which took him about a month to finish--you can guess why--Edwin met the daughter.

How tired I feel so I decide to take a trip to Hawaii as I have always w anted to do. I arrive on the shores of the island where music never ceases. I tour the island and encounter a beautiful school building which many Hawaiin beauties attend. Among loviest of these beauties is the teacher. She is an old class mate of mine. Miss Ruby Kurowia. She is a very able teacher and her pupils love her dearly. May the music continue as you give them your knowledge for success is yours.

Suddenly I am brought back to my own world and once again I am lonely. Realizing how much my classmates have meant to me, I reluctantly put the book away and continue my packing.

They Said It Couldn't Be Done

Four garage mechanics had been toiling all night trying to loosen a truck wedged under a low bridge. The next morning a youngster on his way to school paused to watch them.

"Haven't you moved that truck yet", the boy snickered. "I could do it all by myself in five minutes."

The sleepy mechanics were in no mood to be heckled by a boy. They looked up with anger on their grimy faces. One of the mechanics asked him how he would do it.

"Easy", said the youngster. "Just let the air out of the tires."

"When a new idea is born into the world," Edward Slasson used to say, "the thing gets off with a handicap of about one billion, eight hundred million adverse votes." This doesn't apply only to the man on the street who chirps that it can't be done: this includes the experts, the fellows who know all there is to know about a subject, but are the first to put three strikes against a new idea.

You and I can walk into any five and dime store today and for ten cents buy a bulb that ten years ago cost forty cents and would have given only halfas much light.Why?Because of a joke that oldtimers in the lamp research division of General Electric were in the habit of playing on young engineers "fresh out of college," who hadn't yet found out about the many things that just couldn't be done.

For years engineers of General Electric had been searching for a way to frost bulbs on the inside. But everyone around the lab knew that the thing "couldn't be done." So youngsters raring to set the scientific world on its ear were initiated by being given the"impossible" job. Everyone had a good time except the "sweating initiate." When Marvin Pickin reported for work at the General Electric Research Laboratories, he was promptly assigned the "Impossible task." He found a way to frost bulbs on the inside. Pipkin hadn't been told that it couldn't be done.

Yes, my classmates and I are going to be told "it can't be done." However, we aren't going to believe them. When experts shake their heads at new ideas; we, who don't believe a thingisimpossible, are going to go right ahead and do it. Watch us!

Youth And The Church

Today, when the world has been torn asunder by political jealousy, racial hatred, and, of course, physical destruction; we, the living people of this day and age, seem to have lost faith in our Christian religion.

We have been seized by a wave of uncertainty, which has left us dazed and wondering what's going to become of us.

We are no longer able to seek refuge and comfort in our religious beliefs, but must bend our efforts toward the destruction of everything which they represent.

With a knowledge of this, can we righteously justify present day action with that which the Bible teaches? Will religion survive and progress in this declining age of Christian worship? Is religion being interpreted in a different meaning?

The answers to everyone of these questions will be given by the Youth of today--the world leaders of tomorrow.

Youth is directly concerned with the church and vice-versa; for in the ingenuity and fervor of Youth lies the success of the church of tomorrow. It is the Youth that leads in all enterprises of activity, and it is increased activity which is vital to the survival of the church. It is the zeal and creativeness of Youth which has made the church a more attractive institution.

Now, concerning the attributes of the church, with which we are all familiar, what is the relation, of the Church to the Youth and their work in the world.

First, we must consider the meaning of religion itself. Religion, in a larger sense, is the belief in man's capacity for goodness. This goodness entails, above all, love, charity, and Christian fellowship.

However, current events do not support this statement, you may say. There is little evidence of love in a world where brother kills brother, where propaganda agitates hatred among the different classes of people. You fail to recognize any semblance of Christian fellowship when envy, distrust, and suspicion are now so prevalent. The ennumerable concentration camps spread over the vast European continents can hardly be called charitable institutions.

These are truly difficult questions to answer. No completely satisfactory answer can be given. The chaotic state of world affairs renders it all the more difficult. Here science and psychology are definite failures.

Soldiers are not incited to battle by love for one another, but by sheer hatred. In today's prodigious conflagration, millions of men willingly throw themselves in the face of certain death. Why? For what? Is it glory, adventure, obligation to country? Why does not man cease his ruthless killing, torturing, and destroying? What is to be gained by it?

We are told that we sacrifice our lives, our fortunes , and our sacred honor for the glorious traditions established by our ancestors for the cherished ideals and beliefs, which are the essence of our democratic government. Yes, truly so. But what is the impelling force, the inspiration behind it all?

The answer to this can only be found in the realms of unknown. It is the overwhelming superior power, which lies in the recesses of man's mind, that controls his unexplained actions.

We are aware of this love of God eternal, but we do not strive to seek it.

Therein lies the need for the union of Youth and the Church. When this love shall be instilled into the minds and actions of the world leaders of tomorrow, the spiritual qualities necessary to build justice and tolerance into the lives of men during the post-war era of construction will not be found lacking.

Eager, impatient, agressive, nonchalant Youth will be the stimulus that will augment the sphere of influence of the Church. The inexorable enthusiasm of Youth shall radiate upon the immortal soul of the church.

The combined strength of Youth and the church shall present an almost insuperable barrier to the furtherance of belligerent pursuits.

And may that blessed day soon come when men can live in concord and harmony with his fellow--neighbor; when peace, love, and tranquillity shall be the strongest emotions; when men of all races, creeds and religion can be welcomed into the universal hearth of spiritual sentiment.

With this course laid out before us, and under the guidance of the divine being above, we cannot and will not fail the church in this inviolate mission.

"The Lord is my light and my salvation; whom shall I fear? Though war should rise against me, in this will I be confident."

WHAT GRADUATION MEANS TO A JUNIOR

Most of us underclassmen are happy that high school is about to end for another year, but those who are graduating often feel differently. They cannot look forward to another year in high school, and probably the larger part, if not all, are feeling rather sad although they may not say so.

Graduation means one thing to a Senior and another thing to a Junior. To a Senior it means attending Baccalaureate, taking part in Class Day exercises, and in the actual graduation exercises, as well as attending the reception. Behind all these are the thoughts of what he or she has done and enjoyed in the past and what he or she will do in the future.

To a Junior, like me, and probably like most Juniors, graduation means attending all these affairs and enjoying them with the idea that I will be in that place next year. I begin to realize that every day that goes by is bringing me nearer and nearer the time when I shall leave high school forever. But to me, graduation is more than hearing people talk and participating in the exercises myself; it means that I have succeeded in completing one more step in my ladder of education.

This year, graduation should mean more to everyone, whether a Junior, Senior, or other underclassman. Since we are at war, I think that it is becoming increasingly more important to be well-educated, for the person who has, at least graduated from high school is of much more use to Uncle Sam than the one who left school at an earlier date.

I, as a Junior, believe that graduation symbolizes a turning point in one's life, a turning point which I should make an outstanding incident in my career--a time to which I can look back with joy and with pride. I hope that my graduation will mean that I have successfully completed my work in high school and am fully prepared to further my education, if I may have the good fortune to do so.

WORLD PEACE

We talk of "world peace"; we sing about "world peace"; we read about "world peace"; but, we do not have world peace. Obviously, something is wrong! What is it!

The first thing is that people think peace will come "ready made." They don't realize that peace must be made, that we must start with raw materials, refine them and weave them into a pattern. For raw materials, we use the people of the world. The refining is training in world citizenship. When every American can realize that he is not only a citizen of America but a citizen of the world as well; then, the first seeds of world peace can be implanted in his mind. We can never really have world peace as long as any one person limits his duty and loyalty to one country. Such narrow mindedness createsdisrespect and distrust for others; it makes men greedy and selfish; two of the chief causes of all wars. It is very true, people must be patriots of their own country, but how much greater is a patriotism of the world.

The second thing which retards world peace is the fact that all nations look to their neighbors to make the first move. Every nation sits back and waits for the other to reduce its armaments and declare its intention to be peaceful. We look at the countries across the water and observe the things which they fail to do, but we forget our own failings. It is simply the old truth of taking the bean from your own eye before taking the one from your brother's eye.

We can never have peace by signing treaties, for they can be too easily destroyed. Our people must be taught to be good world citizens.

The responsibility of establishing World Peace will fall upon those of us who graduate this year, aswell as the older men and women. The youth of America say we can and will have peace, permanent peace, reaching all people of the world!

Our Changed Life

If we think our life has been drastically changed by the war, we still have a great many surprises coming to us. Everything we do has to be exerted to bring victory. Our nation maybe geared to war, but victory can not be assured until everyone realizes his duties and responsibilities in a war. We must sacrifice; not only material things, but some of our freedoms too. Storekeepers are told how much they can charge for their products. Consumers are not able to buy some goods and cannot buy others without ration cards, and we can not always be told all that goes on. But our president has promised to tell us all the news, good and bad, as long as the news is not, in any way, helpful to the enemy. We have to sacrifice, but we don't mind. Our sacrifices will make us appreciate our privileges more and make for victory. We, who are behind the lines, will fight too. We'll fight against enemy propaganda, false rumors, and a slipping of morale. We can produce-produce for victory. We can never sleep. All the time, our factories and farms must produce. Through these stupendous efforts, great sacrifices, and gigantic striv ings, only, can we be successful in attaining victory!

Ode to the Marines

You may have your Army Khaki
You may have your Navy Blue
But I know another fighter
I will introduce to you.

His uniform is different,
The best you've ever seen,
The Germans call him devil dog,
But his real name is Marine.

He is trained at Parris Island,
The land God forgot,
Where the sand is fourteen inches deep,
And the sun is scorching hot.

He has peeled a million onions
And twice as many spuds,
And all the spare time that he has;
He spends washing up his duds.

He has set many a table
And many a dish he's dried,
He has also learned to make his bed,
And a broom he surely can guide.

Now, girls, just take a tip,
Straight from me to you,
Get yourself a good Marine,
For there's nothing he can't do.

And when he dies and to heaven he goes,
To St. Peter he will tell,
"Another Marine reporting, Sir,
I've served my time in Hell."

"Number Seven Mystery"

Detective John Kanes hastily mounted the stairs of James Kayer's mansion in answer to the maid's frantic phone call. She was so excited that he had been unable to distinquish where her words stopped and others began, but of one thing he was sure because she repeated "seven" and murder! so often.

"Come on Doc," he said to the gray haired man who followed him.

Doc. Games who was Kane's constant companion, had an intense jaw, sensitive mouth, and keen blue eyes, and a blond mustachethat was now graying. He was the opposite of John, who was in his twenties, dark complectioned, brown eyed and very tall and broad shouldered.

"Coming Jack," said Doc quite out of breath as his stooped shoulders and quickly indrawn breath showed his exertion plainly,

John rang the bell of the house impatiently. The door opened instantly.

"Hello Mr. Kanes," said a middle aged lady to John, "come in. The body is upstairs. It's old Mr. Kayer you know he's Oh, he's dead." Her southern accents trembled "and I'm scared! He's been murdered!"

"Come along and show me the room," said John, as he began to climb the stairs signaling Doc to follow. They reached the top when Doc remarked,

"I say why are all the rooms numbered? Was this a hotel once?

"No, sir," said Kate, "You see, Mr. Kayer is a bachelor, and he has no relatives so he decided that he would give all of his money to the old man's home, so he was having the house remodeled and re-furnished. I have been using room 1 on this floor, Mr. Kayer said we might use the ones we wanted so I took this one and furnished it with furniture which was in the attic, Jacques did the same."

"Jacques?" queried John, "Who is he--The gardener?"

"Oh, no," said Kate, "He's the butler, and a craftier looking person you've never seen, Oh, here we are."

The room they entered was large and sunny. Kate stayed at the door while John and Doc entered. Doc hurried to examine the body of the dead man. Kayer's hands were clinched even in death; there was a surprised look on his wrinkled face. His dark suit showed no sign of a struggle. He was seated at a desk where several packs of cards were strewn. The room did not show signs of a struggle either. Everything was in order.

Arising from the seated figure with its head lying on the desk, Doc stated grimly, "Death by a blow on the head. It was some heavy object, but he did not die instantly, he must have had intense pain. Call the men up to take the body away. I'll make a better investigation at the station."

"All right," said John, "See you later," as Doc went down, "Kate," he said, "was Mr. Kayer a card player to any unusual degree?"

"No, sir, he just like to play once in a while with Jacques," she answered.

"When did you last see Mr. Kayer alive?"

"Last night I told him good night and asked him if he liked to have a cup of coffee before he went to bed, but he said, "No," and told me to run along. He was such a nice old man," she sobbed.

"When did you see him this morning?" asked John.

"It was time when I went into Mr. Kayer's den this morning about ten o'clock. He was just as you see him now, so I called you up right away I was so frightened."

"Where was Jacques all this time?"

"Jacques wasn't here. That's funny too because you see, Jacques usually comes down to get Mr. Kayer's breakfast around nine o'clock. I took the tray and brought it in. It'sstill there on the end table. You see I put it there thinking Mr. Kayer was asleep, when I went to awake him I saw"------Her face grew white just thinking of it.

"At what time did you get up?" he asked Kate examining the furniture for finger prints. "Hello," he exclaimed before Kate could answer. He was at this point examining the desk, "Why is there a cleared place here? Strange, there's a place here with a number seven in blood. It seems smeared on. Could Kayers have put it there?

"By Jove let's see Kayers was sitting here. Could it be that Kayer meant to give us a clue to the murder. We have a motive! "Mmmm," he mused, You say Kayer was going to leave this house to the city. Wasn't there someone who objected to this?"

"No, no one except a great--great--nephew by marriage, but we never could find out who he was because he only wrote and did not sign his name. So we never could find him."

"Very well, Kate, that will be all. You couldn't have killed him for it took a Man's strength to hold that weapon. Did Mr. Kayer have any large weapon about?"

"No n--no," said Kate doubtfully "I don't think so. Let's see. There wasn't any in his room. I'll go make a cup of tea for you."

"Very well", said John rather absent-mindedly.

A few moments later he started as foot steps sounded on the stairs. "How do you do," said a hatchet faced man with small shifty eyes and loose mouth,he was clothed in a black suit in butler fashion; "I am Steven Jacques, Mr. Kayer's butler, Who are you?" his tone was snobbish and his voice high and sneering.

"I am Detective Kane from the Police;Mr. Kayer was murdered, you know. May I examine your rooms?"

"What business may you have in my rooms?"

"Just routine you know."

"Very well then, come along."

The two men went up the stairs to room seven and to Kate's room. John's deductive powers began to put a few facts together when he entered Kate's room. Well, well, the room was sparsely furnished, and the windows were curtained simply. While passing a heavy dresser, John accidently bumped it. The heavy piece of furniture tottered uncertainly. John looked down to see the cause and saw that one of the huge legs was broken off and had been hastily put back to support the other part. He saw when he bent to examine, that it had bits of hairs stuck on the under side with clots of blood on it.

He did this so quickly that Jacques did not notice the pause.

"I must say, Mr. Jacques, you don't seem to be upset about this,"

"Oh, I am, I am," blubbered Jacques. "You hardened cops don't see anything when a man is sorrowing."

"Yes, I can see you are."

"Well, very well I'm through; I've seen all I've wanted to see, I guess !"

He hastily rushed to the telephone, which was ringing violently:-

"Hello?" he asked, "Who is it, oh, Doc, Yes, this is Kane. What The dead man had a Jack of clubs in his hand? Hold everything Doc. I've found the murderer! Come back here."

He turned and hastened after retreating figure of Jacques on the stair case. Jacques had not heard the conversation and went casually along with John to the kitchen, where Kate was already making tea and had made a few sandwiches. John stalled for time by examining room on the other floors of the secluded suburban residence of the exclusive John Kayer. The old man's death would be no great loss to anyone. At last the Doctor arrived, and John laid the only clues before him as follows:

1. The bloody number seven on the desk top.

2. The broken leg of the dresser with its clawed foot and sticky, bloody hair was obviously the murder weapon.

3. The card of the Jack of Clubs (if it could be called a clue) in the dead man's hand.

All for One Thing

Jim went inside the tent. Well, no one was inside, now was his time to write home. Captain James Farnsworth was one of those men who had escaped to Australia from the Philippines. He took his stationery from the case and sat down to write. When he had finished his letter, there were footsteps outside. Then, a voice spoke, "Jim, are you in there?" Then, a head was stuck inside the tent. This person might have been one of Hollywood's best stars to look at him. He was six feet tall, dark, and very handsome. But, Bill Smith, was just an American boy who fought well in the Philippines for his country.

"Sa y Jim, do you know who was in the last boatload of soldiers that landed in today? Well, its Allan Knight. Yes, the Movie star!" Bill was excited as any normal person should be to see America's idol of the movies.

Jim didn't speak for a second, then he said slowly, "Yes, I know Bill, he's going to be in this company. I got the news from the Major today." Bill looked thoughtful for a second then spoke. "Allan Knight won't find this just a story to be dramatized with a girl at the end of it. This is the real thing, he'll find out soon enough."

Three weeks passed, and Allan Knight was an ordinary private of the American Expeditionary forces in Australia. During the first weeks he was there, he stood all the remarks the boys had thrown at him and did his duty faithfully. In fact, everybody was surprised to see him do the work without making a single complaint.

One afternoon as Bill was walking down the street as he had a furlough, he heard whistles blowing and sounds of airplane in the distance. He knew those airplane sounds because he had heard them so often in the Philippines. He started to run for a shelter. When, suddenly bang! an explosion nearby! He turned, then he heard a scream! When he got to the pile of stone he saw Allen bending over a child. Then, suddenly a brick fell on Allan's head and knocked him unconscious. Bill ran and got Allan and the child and called for help from some man nearby.

Three days later Bill called to see Allan in the hospital. As Bill neared the bed, Allan spoke slowly "You were swell, fella, I wish I could do something for you. Bill looked at Allan for a moment and said, "We'refighting now for the same thing; but when we get back, you can get me a "date" with Hedy Lamarr!"

"Farewell to The Seniors"

When graduation comes around,
The seniors will all have a frown
They'll "hate" to leave the school you know
In which they had so many friends and not a foe.

But let us be serious and wish them luck
And hope they may all trouble duck
They should now be ready to do or die
Without their kind teachers to get them by.

With all the seniors, ambitious and strong
May good fortune always follow along
May they gain enough for fortune and fame
To make us, left behind, strive for the same.

Solution to Number Seven Mystery

"You see, Doc," said Kane. "It's this way. No, Jacques, don't move. This, I'm sure, will interest you.

"Well, Doc, to continue. The number seven in blood on the desk--there seems to be a meaning indicated, here. Could Kayer have meant this to be a sign of his murderer's identity? Seven. What is your full name Kate?"

"Katherine Allowissus Pink," she said sadly.

"Thank you, and Jacques your full name. Never mind you told me. Steven Jacques. Your name gave you away.

The card, the Jack, indicated the weapon. Well, what could be a better club than a leg of a dresser which has claws carved onit. By the way Kate how did that leg break?"

"Oh, sir, it broke the day we moved it; and Jacques put it back and stuck it with glue. I was very partial to it, and I wanted it in my room."

"Thank you, Kate." So Jacques knew about the broken dresser leg that makes me sure that Kate is definitely not the murderer. In the first place, she would not have had the strength to take the leg out, kill Kayer, and lift the dresser after it had fallen unless she had had help but Kate was with me about the time of the murder. I met her at Bessie Peer's wedding this morning at eight o'clock at the time the man was murdered. So Jacques and the other unknown man are the only possible ones. The long removed nephew hardly plausible though possible. So only S teven Jacques remains. The bloody seven was meant to be indicative of the name Steven and the card, the Jack, is the murder's last name.

Now, the motive? What was it Jacques. Stop!

Jacques had leaped up throwing back his chair to the floor rushing for the door only to be met by Kate, who was bravely banishing the bread knife, at Jacques, vowing she would "Cut his head off if he moved toward the door."

It was later that afternoon that Jacques gave the motive under pressure. He stated that he was the thrice removed nephew by marriage and being Kayer's friend (supposedly) he learned of his will and the sudden change of plan giving the house and estate to the city.

" Well, Katy, that was short and sweet," stated Doc. "You saved the police a lot of trouble. Now save yourself a lot of trouble by telling me what is my motive for breaking our promise to be bachelors forever more. Here's a wedding ring and a testimony stating thus: Katherine Pink and Doctor Games will be married June first and thus request that you be best man at the wedding.

"Why, Doc, you old rascal. Let me congratulate you. You're going to be married!"

"Yes, she makes good cookies, you know."

Our Meadow

When I walk up through the meadow,
Along our winding brook,
Each inch of ground seems good to me.
No matter where I look.

The trees are choked with wild grape vines
from which we used to swing,
And memories of our old playhouse
These trees are sure to bring.

Berry bushes scattered here and there
Provide a special treat.
The berries picked right from the bush
Are always fresh and sweet.

Under shady trees across the creek
The Holsteins eat and rest;
And birds sing on, and on, and on---
In nearby trees they rest.

There comes a sweet contentment
From each flower, bird and tree.
Some folks may like the city,
But the farm is the place for me.

The proceeds of this Concertwere used to pay for the new Glee Club Books used at the Concert.

As the school year draws to a close, and many present members of the Club bid goodbye, the club as a whole should feel that they have spent their time for good, and not for nothing, during seventh period on Tuesdays. The appreciation of good music will pass away many weary hours in the years to come.

Student Council Report

The Student Council officers, 1942 were:President, Barbara Grimwade; Vice-President, Kenneth Kuehl; Secretary, Grace Converse; Treasurer, Marie Buteau.

The Council, composed of twenty-one members, has enjoyed a very successful year. A good deal of the credit should be given to our President, Barbara Grimwade.

We cannot boast of a large sale of Student Council tickets this year. We had expected to have a good sale of the tickets this year, but for some reason very few were actually sold. We hope that in the future the students will give more support to this enterprise.

This year's magazine contest was a decided success. Our sales amounted to $545.50, This is a great deal more than we have sold in any previous year. The entire school took an interest in the contest, and everyone did his best to sell at least one or two magazines. We have been longing for showers for a long time now, so with our profits we had one shower installed for the girls and two showers installed for the boys.

The Council sponsored the Christmas Box again this year. We are proud of the fact that the students respond so well to this project of doing good for those less fortunate than ourselves.

For quite some time the pupils have been doing their part for national defense. They have been collecting paper. In this way they have been able to increase their home-room treasuries as well as that of the Student Council.

After a great deal of work and thought the Council has finally adopted designs for the Student Council Awards for the Point System. We believe that these designs will be satisfactory to everyone. I would like to add that those who earn these awards have to work hard for them, and they deserve a great deal of credit.

The Council purchased new suits for the girls' basketball team and also for the boys' baseball team. These suits will undoubtedly add to the appearance of both the teams.

The Council sponsored an assembly, which was presented by Verne, the Magician. It was enjoyed by everyone present.

The Council also held the annual Spelling Bee, and later on the annual All Star Assembly. Both of these assemblies give the students a chance to show their own individual talents. It is surprising, the amount of talent that we have in this one little high school!

Besides those already mentioned, the Council has engaged in many other worthy enterprises.

We sincerely hope that the Council of the years to come will have as successful a year as 1942 has been. Best of luck to them!

Secretary

BASEBALL

After a few weeks of Spring Training on the so called "Mud Stadium" the Charlton High baseball team started its season schedule by meeting Rutland. Here Charlton suffered a 9-7 defeat, lost in the ninth inning of the game. From here they went to Leicester, where they lost by the score of 22-6. Two games and two losses. It looks serious as to the ability of the team. But from here they went on to Southbridge, where they met Cole Trade and trimmed them by the score of 15-9. Now that they have hit the winning stride, lets hope they keep it up.

The first practice brought out about twenty-two candidates, from all the grades. After all candidates had showed their "stuff", Mr. Bruce selected his first team.

Everill Ashe-----------------1st Base
Lefty Gouin------------------2nd Base
Kenneth Langway--------------Short Stop
John Pierangeli--------------Third Base
George Fitzgerald------------Left Field
Stan Cook--------------------Center Field
Maurice Hill-----------------Right Field
Bruce Lamprey----------------Catcher
Kenny Kuehl------------------Pitcher

The team has four games left to play. They are: Spencer, Holden, North Brookfield, and Oxford. If we could only win one of these games we would like to beat Oxford and Ray Brodeur. We hope to win them all.

Respectfully submitted,
Kenneth Kuehl, Acting Manager

Basketball 1941-2

We started the Basketball season this year with few victories. But, nevertheless, the players did the best they could, and we are all very appreciative of their effort.

The team this year consisted of: Peters, Pierangeli, Koji, Hill, Gouin, as forwards; Ashe, and Fitzgerald, as center; and Cook, Bishop, and Langway as guards.

We shall be sorry to lose three members of the team this year, but we hope next fall will be more successful than this year has been, and I think that it will be because there is a good Jay vee team coming along and there are also regulars left from this year.

This year class basketball went along as well as could be expected and in the finals, the Seniors swamped the Sophomores.

Respectfully submitted,
Lowell Bond, Manager

BOYS' TRACK

The Track team participated in only two meets during this school year. One was at Amherst; and the other, at Spencer. At these meets, they met boys who were from larger schools, where the facilities for practicing the different types of track, were superior to those of our school. This is not an alibi for not winning, but it is only stressing the old saying; "practice makes perfect."

The members of the track team were as follows: Stanley Cook, Alexander Peters, John Pierangeli, Earl Whitney, Francis Allen, Buehl Phillips and Donald Bishop.

Respectfully submitted,
Kenneth Kuehl, Manager

GIRLS' TRACK

The only out of town meet we attended this year was Warren Grange Meet held October 4,1941.

The star this year was Anna Thompson, who made fourteen points followed by Mildred Robidoux with one point. In the 880 yard dash the eight girls who participated camein second place, this made a total of 18 points.

We received the cup from Warren Grange.

We hope next year's, track team will be more active and as successful as this years.

Respectfully submitted,
B. Loland, Manager

GIRLS' BASKETBALL

This season hasn't been so successful as other seasons, but I think that the girls enjoyed playing basketball. It is hoped that next year's season will be more successful, and that more girls will turn out for basketball.

The Senior Girls won the class Basketball Trophy. They played the Junior Girls in Assembly and trounced them with a score of 32 to 20. Here's to a successful season next year.

Respectfully submitted,
Verna M. Gard
Basketball Manager.
